Dear Brenda,

I wanted to get this down in writing and to you before I got into the 'next-big-thing' here at the Foundation and the intention slipped away.

Governor Claude Kirk, at the meeting that our endowment campaign consultant, Woody Wilson, and I had with him, typified the impact and importance of the 35th Anniversary Gulfstream Goodwill book that you created for that milestone year. The meeting started with his assurances that he would do anything that he could to help Goodwill, but this was truly hollow as there was nothing for him to directly help with....UNTIL.... the book came out. Once had the names, pictures, and stories in front of him, the useful information just FLOWED and you could tell by his actions and speech that the Goodwill story had become alive for him and he knew he was helping us greatly by simply telling us what he knew of these important people in Goodwill's past. And wow, didn't he tell us who was connected to who, and how they are connected, and who is doing what, and who we should speak to about what...

Although this interview is certainly the latest and greatest instance of importance of this historical reference, it is by no means the only. When we are with people who have been part of this community for one, two, or even three generations, they point to relatives, friends, friends of friends in the book and feel connected to Goodwill mission through the contributions the past supporters. And most certainly, they feel that if Goodwill was worth their time and effort, it is worth current consideration.

Thanks again for doing such a great job. Now the mission is to keep and build on the relationship we have currently so we can recognize our supporters on a continual basis!

Sincerely,
